Calhoun; ed. at home, in Calhoun's Valley, Cal., chiefly by her mother, later at San José (Cal.) Normal School, and later college and univ. courses in London and Paris; m. London, 1906, Prince Lazarovich-Hrebelianovich, present head of the old royal and imperial Servian dynastic family of that name; one daughter: Zara, b. 1905, died same year. After several tentative performances of Shakespeare and two other poetical plays, entered upon regular stage career at Royal Haymarket Theatre, London, under management of Sir Squire and Lady Bancroft; entire stage work in London and Paris, except a few special and memorial performances. Played in London the Shakespearian rôles of Rosalind (in As You Like It), Juliet, Portia (Merchant of Venice), Portia (Julius Cæsar), Viola, Beatrice, Cleopatra and Lady Macbeth; also Dora, in Diplomacy, Lydia Languish, Peg Woffington, Hester Prynne, in The Scarlet Letter, etc. Played in Paris, in French language, Katherine, in French translation of Taming of the Shrew, with Coquelin Ainé and the Comédie Française Company at the Théatre d'Orléans, with such success that she was engaged by the French Government to play leading rôles at the Theatre National d l'Odéon in Paris, at the same salary paid at that theatre to Rachel, Sarah Bernhardt and Coquelin Aimé; only person from English-speaking stage who had ever played in the French tongue and been a member of the French National Theatre; most notable successes of stage career were the rôle, in French, of Hermione, in Racine's Andromaque, and the rôle, in English, of Lady Macbeth, especially at the memorial performance of that part which she played on Shakespeare's birthday at Stratford-on-Avon. Played under her own name of Eleanor Calhoun, and retired from stage previous to her marriage. Early in stage career originated the idea of playing pastoral and sylvan plays in the open forest, in a performance of As You Like It, at Coomb Wood, Surrey, England; an idea since much exploited by professionals and amateurs in Europe and America. In London, wrote and played in Miliament and Mirabel (adaptation of Congreve's comedy The Way of the World); wrote Charlotte Corday (historic play); produced dramatization of Hawthorne's Scarlet Letter; translated Adrienne Lecouvreur, La Haine, etc.; contributed to Westminster Review and other publications; wrote third act of The Mission Play (with exception of six adapted speeches), as originally produced at San Gabriel Mission Theatre (Los Angeles), in April-May, 1912.
